ONE GOES TO "PEN," THREE TO CO. JAIL FOR BLEW ROBBERY

Court Severely Lectures The Prisoners and Gives Them Sentence

MUST GIVE PROTECTION

Court States Owners of Summer
Homes Will Be Safeguarded

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 29.—Declaring that the Court of Bucks county wants the people of the upper-end section of the county to feel safe when they leave their summer homes for their nearby city residences, Judge Calvin S. Boyer yesterday sent one man to the penitentiary and three others to the Bucks County Prison, after they had pleaded guilty to robbing a summer home belonging to Dr. E. W. Blew, connected with the Allentown State Hospital.

Dr. Blew's summer home is located near Springtown. It was robbed of a large amount of household goods and some valuable antiques, most of which have been recovered.

Those who pleaded guilty and the sentences they received are as follows:

Charles Glose, 40, married, of 513 Alaska street, Bethlehem, sentenced to serve not less than two or more than four years in the Eastern State Penitentiary and pay the costs.

Peter Coaches, 38, of near Center Valley, sentenced to pay the costs and serve not less than 10 months or more than three years in the Bucks County Prison.

Philip Dreisbach, 39, of 513 Alaska street, Bethlehem, sentenced to pay the costs and serve not less than 3 months or more than three years in the Bucks County Prison.

Elmer Hottenstein, 60, of Bethlehem, sentenced to pay the costs and serve not less than three months or more than three years in the Bucks County Prison.

Judge Boyer directed the Clerk of Quarter Sessions to recommend to the State Highway Department that inasmuch as automobiles owned by Coaches and Dreisbach were used in the commission of a felony, that the licenses of the two men be revoked for a year.

Attorneys for the defendants asked the Court to be lenient with the men, but Judge Boyer said that he could not allow any of them to get away without a sentence.

"The crime is too serious," Judge Boyer said. "I could send you to the penitentiary for ten years. Judge Keller and I have both agreed that it is not a good policy to allow cases like this kind to go by the board with an easy sentence."

"That particular neighborhood near the Lehigh county line has been harassed by men like you for several years. I have been informed this is the third time that Dr. Blew's home was robbed. There is no excuse for any of you not knowing better for other men were sentenced for the same kind of a crime in that section some time ago."

"You, Dreisbach and Hottenstein, must be very weak individuals for having been led into a thing like this by a dull and self-confessed inebriate, Charles Glose."

"As to you, Coaches, we are satisfied that you were going to take part in another hold-up too. You have not been frank with the Court and if we find that you did not tell the truth, and that you have been holding something back, this Court will not consider a parole at the expiration of your minimum sentence."

"As to you, Glose, you were the ringleader of this affair and the Court has nothing more to say about your case. We want the people however, to feel that the upper-Bucks county section will be a safe place in which to live in the future and that people will not be afraid to buy summer homes and be molested by men like you."

On the witness stand, Coaches told the Court that he was never inside Dr. Blew's house but remained outside and helped to load the loot. He said that he did know that Glose and Hottenstein went to Easton to try and sell some of the stolen antiques.

Glose testified that Coaches came to him and talked about holding up some well-to-do miller in the upper-end section, who carried a lot of money. Glose admitted that he looked at the Dr. Blew place a week before it was robbed to get the lay of the land so that he could rob it. Glose admitted that ten years ago he was arrested for larceny and that several years ago he was arrested on a manslaughter charge.

LYNCHINGS IN THREE STATES

Another lynching—this one in Missouri—was added to the nation's rising toll today.

So far this week mob violence inspired by lynchings have occurred in three widely separated states.

Missouri—at St. Joseph's—a mob of 7,000 hanged and burned Roy Warner, 19 year old negro who had confessed to assaulting a white girl.

Maryland—at Salisbury—a mob of more than 1,000 stormed the state armory in an unsuccessful effort to free four persons, charged with being leaders of a mob that lynched a negro a month ago, from the National Guard.

California—at San Jose—two confessed kidnappers-slayers were lynched, creating a nation-wide furor of comment. The California lynching brought a flood of statements from individuals and organizations, officially attacking the position of Governor James Rolph. However, one prominent clergyman dissented. The Rev. Dr. H. Darlington, rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest sent Governor Rolph a telegram applauding Rolph's declaration that the lynching was a "good job."

Governor Ritchie of Maryland, determined that law should prevail in mob violence in his state, issued a statement in which he asserted that in ordering the National Guardsmen to arrest suspected slayers of George Armwood, negro, he had done his obvious duty and had acted only when local officials had refused to do so.

At Jefferson City, Missouri, Governor Park, when informed of the lynching said "I have no comment to make."

Governor Park ordered out 35 tank corps of the Missouri National Guard when the crowd became threatening.

ARREST EX-PASTOR AND ACCUSE HIM OF BURNING DOWN BARN

Linford K. Foulke, 59, Quakertown, Taken Into Custody

EX-MENNONITE PASTOR

Prisoner Refuses to Discuss Case and Is Held For Further Hearing

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 29.—Charged with burning down his barn on a farm that he owns in Richland township, Linford K. Foulke, 59, of Quakertown, a former Mennonite minister, insurance company director and once secretary of the Bucks-Lehigh County Farm Loan Association, was arrested yesterday by State Police and is in the Bucks County Prison at Doylestown, facing a charge of arson.

Foulke, a married man, with six children, preached in the upper-Bucks county section for 14 years, until more than a year ago when he was implicated in a civil suit in court.

Troopers Felix R. Gowan and H. S. Dando, of the Newtown sub-station of State Police and County Fire Marshal William L. Stackhouse, of Hulmeville, arrested the minister-farmer, on his farm Tuesday noon, and brought him to Doylestown before Justice of the Peace W. Carlile Hobensack where he was committed to the County Prison in default of bail, which in an arson case, must be fixed by the Court. There will be a hearing in the case December 6 before Justice Hobensack.

Trooper Gowan is the prosecutor in the case and asked to have the hearing continued until December 6. The information charges him with arson, in burning down his barn on July 5, in Richland township, not far from the borough limits of Quakertown.

Foulke was questioned briefly yesterday but refused to talk about a fire to the State Police. The farm on which the fire occurred last July was owned by Foulke and occupied by William Miller, who now lives in Montgomery county. Insurance on the barn, it was reported yesterday, has never been collected by Foulke, although some insurance on the contents of the barn was paid to a former occupant of the farm who leased the place from Foulke.

State Police will continue a rigid investigation into the Foulke case during the next ten days.

Merchants Are Addressed By Two Philadelphia Men

Bristol Merchants Association members met last night in the Moose home to hear Thomas J. Kennedy, vice-president of the Northeast Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, speak on "The importance of a merchants' association in a community," and the need for every business man to get behind such a project. Mr. Kennedy also suggested some ideas that he has found practical that would help the local organization.

Another speaker who held the interest of those present was Frank T. Wilson, who in a short address, advised the importance of co-operation. "Without co-operation you can get nowhere. Don't attempt too much at one time," continued Mr. Wilson. "If you have an objective aim your guns at it and finish the job before going after something else."

During the business meeting previous to the speaking, a number of resolutions were adopted and a number of members enrolled.

President Arthur P. Brady asked the members of the advisory committee to bring in prospective members for the next meeting, which will be held in the same hall on Tuesday evening, December 5th at 9 o'clock.

At the conclusion of the meeting a buffet lunch was served to those present.

THANKSGIVING

Tomorrow is Thanksgiving Day and truly in times such as these many have much to be thankful for.

Yes! We should give thanks and that means all of us. It means those who have passed through the most trying times in their lives, as well as those who have been more fortunate. Even the unfortunate have much to be thankful for and if they but stop and ponder for a while they will realize that their plight might have been much worse than it is.

The great tragedy of the Thanksgiving season this year is the possibility that many victims of the business depression may feel there is no occasion for gratitude. Without attempting to minimize the discomfort and suffering incident to the present situation, there is not one person but whose lot could be worse. That statement may not alleviate one's condition, but it is none the less true.

Without much inquiry it is always possible to find some person in worse luck. It may be in health of mind or body. It may be a permanent physical handicap. It may be an educated man cheated of his ambition. It may be grief over the loss of a dear friend. It may be any one of several thousand afflictions which might have come upon you but instead visited another.

It is difficult to be light-hearted on a light stomach. Facing a winter with an empty coal bin is not a pleasant experience. Eagerness to work and no opportunity to do it is deadening to a man of proud spirit. Melting away of expected profits in business is not a source of jubilation. But one may have health, if not money. Or one may lack health, but possess the means to ease pain. One may be jobless but have enough in the bank to tide over the unhappy days.

In every instance there is some cause for thankfulness and hence every propriety for giving thanks. Shakespeare was of course right when he wrote that the winter wind no matter how fiercely it blew was not so unkind as man's ingratitude. His case will be proved if this Thanksgiving season passes without recognition of the Creator and His uniform goodness to mankind.

For it is to Him, naturally, that gratitude is due. The great appeal of Thanksgiving is not merely that it suggests appreciation for all that man has enjoyed within the year but sets his mind to thinking of his obligation to the Great Benefactor without Whose aid and sustenance man would be a pitiful creature.

SYNOPSIS

To help support her stepmother and stepbrother, young and beautiful Patricia Warren, a skilled card player, plays bridge for fifty cents an hour at parties given by the wealthy Mrs. Syccott. Julian Haverholt, noted bridge expert, offers to make Pat his secretary and partner. His amorous advances cause Pat to decline his business offer much to her stepmother's chagrin. Pat meets Clark Tracy, the polo player and her ideal, at Mrs. Syccott's. She is heartbroken to learn he is engaged to the socially prominent Marthe March. Bill McGee, a racketeer, is interested in Pat but she loathes him. However, afraid to refuse his invitation, she accompanies him to a New Year's Eve dance. He is shot by a rival gangster. Frank, Pat's brother, rushes home only to be put out by her stepmother who says the police are looking for Pat. Unable to find employment, Pat turns to professional bridge. One day, she is stunned when Haverholt happens to be one of her opponents. She becomes unnerved and loses heavily. Haverholt takes her home and renews his bridge business offer.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

"Do you remember the last time you asked me to work for you?" she said presently, reopening the subject. "Do you remember what happened?" At his nod, she swallowed, proceeded, "If I did take a job with you, would you promise never to let anything like that happen again?"

He looked coolly into her flushed face. The sunlight shone on her tumbled red hair, on the creamy whiteness of her skin, increased the deep blue of her troubled eyes. He looked and slowly shook his head. "I promise nothing," he said.

His eyes were disturbingly close, disturbingly intimate. Patricia tried to be angry. She was not. This man was such a curious admixture of hardness and softness. She could not make him out. She felt confused and uncertain. All her values were tumbling down around her. She should hate Julian Haverholt, should withdraw from him in loathing, but somehow she didn't.

"You don't want me to promise that," he said.

"Yes, I do."

"What a child you are!" he marvelled. "How can you expect to extract promises from life, promises of that sort? Don't you know there isn't a man living who could make that promise and keep it under any and all circumstances? Don't you know that we don't decide to do things or not to do them? Things just happen and we enjoy them or not as the case may be? Don't you realize that life can't be bargained with? It must be lived!"

An old story, Patricia knew, but somehow Julian Haverholt made it singularly convincing.

"A girl has to think about her reputation," Patricia faltered.

"I'm not proposing to lead you down the primrose path, after all," said Haverholt, smiling. "I'm sorry that you always cast me in the role of the villain. I'm not a villain, really. I'm just a rather nice person who is offering you a good job."

Pat like that, his offer dispelled some of Patricia's doubts. He dispelled the last of them with his next words. He said:

"A little Puritan like you shouldn't be afraid. Are you afraid you can't take care of yourself?"

"Not at all," announced Patricia decidedly. Suddenly she smiled. "I accept your offer and I thank you."

"Then it's a bargain!"

He seized her hand. They shook hands on it, laughing together, pleased with each other, with themselves.

"We should celebrate somehow," Haverholt said tentatively. "I know!" he exclaimed. "Let's drop

"You didn't expect me to join you, did you?" asked Dorothy Luray.

by my place for cocktails. How about it, little new bridge partner?"

"Fine."

They went immediately to his home in Murray Hill. He had a town house, a beautiful square Georgian building, set in a small formal garden, surrounded by a high stone wall. They walked up a flagged path lined on both sides by prim, clipped cedars. Patricia had never in her life been in a private dwelling house. She confessed it.

"City girl," teased Haverholt. "Ever been in a pent-house?"

"No."

"Gosh, I'm going to enjoy showing you things."

"I've never seen a real butler, either," cried Patricia, falling in with his mood. "Have you a butler?"

"I have but Ellis won't be on view today. This is his afternoon off. We'll have the place to ourselves." Haverholt stopped on the path. "Do you mind that? Would you rather go to the Ritz for tea?"

"I'd rather go inside for cocktails," said Patricia.

Haverholt unlocked a great oak door, switched on the lights in a dark, oak paneled foyer. Patricia had no chance to admire or to marvel at her surroundings before the velvet curtains leading to the living room suddenly parted. Haverholt looked a little queer. Patricia herself felt very queer. She and Julian Haverholt were not alone in the place.

Dorothy Luray stood between those curtains.

"You didn't expect me to join you, did you?" asked Dorothy Luray. She was pale and breathing constrainedly. Her hands that still held the velvet curtains, shook slightly. "You didn't expect me, did you?"

"Why, no," replied Haverholt, collecting his scattered forces. "We didn't. But we're glad to have you, Dorothy," he ended politely.

Her smouldering eyes blazed. "That isn't true. You aren't glad. You came here deliberately to get away from me."

"Don't be ridiculous, Dorothy. The thought of you never entered my head. Miss Warren and I dropped by for a cocktail. I confess that your appearance is something of a surprise." Haverholt paused and said to the angry, accusing girl, "Will you join us in the dining room?"

"I will not."

"Then, perhaps you would like me to call a cab for you?" he said with finality.

"I'm going to stay," insisted Dorothy stubbornly.

Until now Patricia had viewed the scene as a spectator, surprised, humiliated, appalled. Now she took a hand.

"In that case," she interposed in tones that were cool and controlled, "I think I'll go."

"I would if I were you," said Dorothy, furiously turning upon her. "I'd go and not come back."

Their eyes met. The two had come to grips at last. The older girl was shattered with hatred and jealousy; the younger was calm, her gloved hands clasped over her pocketbook, her head tilted only a trifle higher than ordinarily.

"Well, why don't you go?"

"I've reconsidered," announced Patricia. "I believe I shall stay unless—" she glanced at Haverholt—"unless you prefer that I leave?"

"I would be grateful if you would stay," Haverholt told her and continued apparently oblivious of the other's presence, "I am in the habit of entertaining guests of my own choice."

"And I'm not your choice, is that it?" demanded Dorothy, white-lipped.

"That's it," admitted Haverholt with a brief laugh. "Surely you're not surprised. In your present state, Dorothy, you could scarcely be termed an amusing companion. And, I don't recall inviting you here."

"Very well."

Suddenly Dorothy rushed blindly into the foyer. The door banged. She was gone. Patricia stared at Haverholt.

"Well, he asked, 'shall we have our cocktails?'"

"I suppose so," she said faintly.

... To operate a Public Utility is not ONE problem . . . it is THREE problems!

To be successful . . . indeed, to remain in business . . . the utility must be so conducted that all receive just shares of the benefits which accrue from the operation of the property.

The Customers' share comes first. Good service at low rates is their due; and the records of this company throughout its history is that this obligation has been met in full. This record is matched (but no more than matched) in its dealings with employees and investors.

Public understanding and fair dealing are necessary to the continuance of such a record.

'STRANGLER' LEWIS HEADS CHAMPIONSHIP BATTLE CARD AT TRENTON ARENA HERE TOMORROW AT 2.30

With Ed "Strangler" Lewis heading an array of the cream of the wrestling realm, Friday's card at Trenton Arena figures to be the best of the season. The four time world's champion is hitting along the comeback trail and is striving to regain the championship for the fifth time. He faces Al "Red Devil" Gieczewicz, hero of the Capital City mat fans in the feature 2 fall out of 3 match.

In the past two weeks Al has gone through two grueling matches with rough house Ernie Dusek. He held the formidable member of the Dusek clan to a draw in the greatest contest ever witnessed at the Arena, and last week after 55 minutes of vicious grappling, was declared the loser in the most exciting ending to a show at the Stockton Street Castle of Crash. With Referee Matt Poljanek lying prone on the canvas from a kick over the heart and Dusek and Al both practically out, Ernie moved over to fall on the ex-imp for the deciding fall. Poljanek leaned over and feebly tapped Ernie. The decision did not sit well with the crowd who felt that big Matt was in no condition to properly judge whether or not he really deserved the verdict. Al lost no prestige whatsoever and Matchmaker Johnny Ipp contracted with him after the Dusek match to grapple the old "head hunter" this week.

Jack Sherry, matland's foremost warrior, returns to the local scene in a one fall finish set to against Jack McArthur of California.

Man Mountain Dean, 300 pound bewhiskered behemoth, will attempt the unusual feat of trying to toss two men in 30 minutes. His opponents will be Stanley Sitkowski and Charlie Leppann.

Mayes McLain and Abie Ginsberg tangle in another time limit encounter, while a new Masked Marvel, managed by our old friend, Bill Lewis, who managed the "Red Devil" last year, faces Jimmy Parker.

HIGH SCHOOL TO CLASH WITH MORRISVILLE TEAM

Tomorrow when the Red and Gray of Bristol clash with the Bulldogs of Morrisville it will most likely be another one of the thrilling games that these teams play.

Morrisville has a great open field runner in "Zip" Malmesbury, who local fans will remember in last year's Bucks County Interscholastic Meet, when he made such a marvelous finish in the senior relay.

The Bulldogs have had quite a successful season, winning three, losing two and tying one. They trounced the Fallsington aggregation, 45-0, while the local club beat the Fallsington bunch, 27-0.

But previous scores mean little when these teams clash, as this is the final game of the season for both clubs and they will be out for blood.

TROJANS WILL MEET STRONG COLORED TEAM

The real mettle of the Bristol Trojan gridiron warriors will receive a major test on Thanksgiving Day when they meet the champion colored team of Philadelphia on Eddington Field at 2.30 o'clock. The champs, bearing the handle Wissahickon Steamrollers, carry a banner which reads undefeated this season and with only one score tallied against them this year.

Hokey Leighton, anticipating the strength his Trojan ball toters will face, has called a special practice for the purpose of better perfecting the new plays he has mapped out for his squad. It was these plays that made the Trojans look like a championship team last Sunday when they trimmed the strong York A. A. to the tune of a 26-0 score—the same tricky plays that gave Harry Mellor a forty yard run to score and Leighton a thirty yard thrilling sprint for a touchdown. Though the visitors were heavier in line weight they were completely baffled by the backfield trickery of the slippery Trojans and new sensational football tactics.

The same style of football will greet the undefeated Steamrollers—the same style of football that may prove the downfall of that high and mighty record of "undefeated." With the new acquisition, Scott, a former Temple backfield man, in the line-up, Leighton has further strengthened his defensive play. Scott, an Eddington boy, proved his worth in his first showing last Sunday against York A. A. Barrett, who has been with the team more than three weeks, has thrilled the spectators many times with his well-timed end runs, while the fast and twisting Leighton is a menace to the opposition. These three fast backfield men coupled up with the brutal line plunging of Mellor, Hughes and the Crossley brothers has made the Trojans a team menacing to any opposition they may face. It is this combination that expects to topple the mighty Wissahickon Steamrollers when they play on Eddington field on Turkey Day afternoon.

FURMANS TO PLAY MORRISVILLE

Tomorrow afternoon the Furman A. C. will journey to Morrisville to play the Morrisville A. C. The Furmans expect to have the best line-up they have had so far this season in order to stop the strong and fast team which Morrisville is said to have. The kick-off is scheduled for 2.30.

The St. Ann's A. A. gridders will defend their Bucks County championship on their home field tomorrow afternoon, meeting the Sellersville Greenjackets. A victory for the "Saints" will mean that they are the permanent champions.

The Sellersville team is coming here to annex the crown. Thus far this season they have played ten games, winning seven, losing two, and tying one. All the teams that the Greenjackets have been playing come from the North Penn Valley section and are very strong. The club has scored a total of 109 points and has had 19 points scored against them.

Last Sunday the Greenies lost a tough 13-6 decision to the Lansdale team which thus far this season is undefeated. Earlier in the season Sellersville lost to Allentown, 6-0. St. Ann's beat Ambler, 6-0, while the boys from the upper part of the county knocked over the Ambler lads, 26-0. So, comparatively writing, the Sellersville team will have a big edge over the locals.

One man the Purple and Gold must stop in this Turkey Day classic is "Wim" Wimmer, former star of the Sellersville-Perkasie High School. Wimmer is well known to several of the St. Ann's players and is a speedy boy. When the local high played Sellersville, once Wimmer broke loose there was no stopping him. Wimmer raced in the Bucks County meets and also the Penn Relays.

The Bristol team is in shape for the fray, several of the injured players again being with the squad. Coach De Risi drilled the boys hard this week and thinks that after the game is over the championship will still be in Bristol.

It was really the intention of the St. Ann's management to close the season with the Thanksgiving Day game, but at a meeting last night it was decided to play one more game, that being for the benefit of the Harriman Hospital. Details for this game will be announced later.

Kick-off tomorrow will be at 2.30 o'clock, sharp.
